September first finds everybody still on the wing. Those who went early in the season have not thought of a return, since every St. Louis resident of sane and sound mind remembers that fortnight of swelter-ing weather we generally experience the early part of this month. Those who have stayed at home all summer, hinting things about a "little trip inter," have hied them-selves off to take said little trip; and are now to be found doing the Buffalo Fair; or else fishing up at Green Lake. The European travelers will not ret sail for home before October, that is, if they are wise; and almost everybody who is now abroad has engaged passage on the early

Atlantic City is a favorite place for just this time. I remember hearing somebody ence say that one always finds more peo-Die and more different kinds of people there how than at any time during the summer. Amusement, consequently, is greater. Pierre Clautice, who couldn't be dragged away from Atlantic City by wild horses, has ingone down. Mr. Clautice has not missed a fortnight at Atlantic for more seasons than are countable,

Edith Franciscus is still in the West, where she went with her married sister early in Jane for a period of recuperation. Miss Franciscus has not been in the best of health for some months, but, I hear, is quite recovered and jounting about very garly. The presence of a masculine devotee, who has gone West iately, to worship at her shrine, may have something to do with her recovery. There were whispers of an en-gagement all last winter, so constantly did the swain seek her society, and so smilingly was he welcomed. But as yet, there has been no announcement. I am wondering, after all, if the returning belies will have as good a report to make as the stay

All that little coterie of friends who know Miss Adele Flanigan fairly well, are ther oughly conversant with the young lady's propensity for making jokes. Not merely bits of persifiage, you know, but jokes that require long and careful thought and which usually involve considerable preparation and as many persons as she can victimize.

A bunch of lively spirits, mostly young men who have, at one time or another, suf-fered much at the hands of the young lady, put their heads together and concocted a beautiful fairy tale last week. They per-fected it to the last detail; then set the springs in motion.

But, though there was snough machinery and to spare; and though oil was used in plenty and the wheels, by every known law of mechanics, ought to have gone round, somehow or other there was a hitch; and the whole thing refused to work. The scheme was this:

Finnian appeared on this page. It was a new picture and a very excellent likenos*. Taking that for their foundation, the conspirators went to work and concocted a letter purporting to have been written by one, Lieutenant Fianigan from Vera Cruz, who proceeded to tell the young lady in language more or less fervour that he had language more or less fervent that he had seen her picture, admired it, felt sure that she must be his long-lost cousin; hinted that she must be his long-lost cousin; hinted that if there really was no legal relationship he would greatly delight in arranging one in the good old way, et cetera, et cetera, sent her a pass op some steamboat line, from New Orleans to Vera Cruz, and invited her to make down and view the country. Loveto come down and view the country. Love-ly time for Vera Cruz scenery, ch?

Now, I've not made my report of the letter sound half so serious and convincing as it really was. When I tell you that the young lady really thrilled a whole lot over this unknown admirer; and the family thought enough of the matter to turn said letter over into the hands of a certain male feland. friend whose wife is Miss Adele's Dest chum, and who is the young lady's eider brother on all occasions, perhaps you will agree that it must have looked and sounded They are still investigating, so

Elder Brother was oliged to go to Buffalo last week on a Surried trip, but he has written to the steamship authorities down Vera Cruz, way to see if they can tell him anything about the gay Lieutenant, and up in Chicago Miss Flanigan is excit-edly watching the mails.

But it is all a deep, dark secret as yet, so, mind you, don't tell a soul.

Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Armstrong and their young daughter. Miss Adele Armstrong, have returned from the Sulphur Springs of West Virginia, where they summered for two months. Morning functions have been the vogue, so Mrs. Armstrong tells me. Cotillons for the young people and card parties for the elderly. This has been the case at nearly every fashionable Eastern resort during the summer—this morning revelry. The dressing, too, has been more elaborate, and the athlette girl is nowhere. Only in the West and by the lakes does she flourish and golf to her heart's content. At the Virginia places and Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Armstrong and heart's content. At the Virginia places and along the Eastern coast everybody has danced and frolicked exactly as in the win-

Rather a pity, isn't it? Most of us get Rather a pity, isn't it? Most of us get eternally tired of the same old things to do by the time Lent comes around. Why should we be made to do them all over again in summer, with only a change of accepts and a new choras?

The wedding of Miss Grace Clarkson and

This wedding of Miss Grace Clarkson and Lawrence Funk of Boomington, which is to take place on Walking in Louisville, will have every right to those two adjectives large and fashlonable. It will be both Bridal parties of any size at all have been so rare in St. Louis of late that we will welcome the novelty of seven maids and the same number of groomsmen with great rejoiding. The bridesmalds are all to be frocked in white and pink, and their robes will not be fashloned alike.

The bride is to wear an all-over lace gown of point de Paris over satin, the deep lace flounce festooned with choux of white liberty. It will be low-necked and made without sleaves the upper arms draped with bands of pearis. Strings of pearis will form a girdle, and she will wear her well caught with pearls in the English style so popular this summer, the jewels banding her forehead. Mr. Funk has given her, among several magnificent pleces of jewelry, a large heart-shaped pendant of diamonds, and this also will be worn.

Miss Clarkson's engagement locket is among the prettiest that I have seen this summer—not too large, and quite round, of dull gold, with a four-less clover design, the petals each composed of a large sapphire of deepest blue, as this is her birtheap stone.

Out in East Maryland avenue the natives of a thickly settled block have been having considerable trouble and fun combined over the gaslamps this summer. Last year no-body minded, since the lamps were not lit until September; but this summer 'tis a dif-ferent and highly annoying tale they have to fell, when, after dining to one's satisfac-tion, pater and mater familias seek the air on their front porch, ensconce themselves in comfortable wicker rockers, and would be tolerably sure of a pleasant evening if it in their eyes.

The residents of block 4200 thought that they had solved the prublem very successfully this summer by procuring large green tin shades, which they proceeded to hang from the framework of the glass globe, thereby cutting off the light from direct radiance onto their front porches. Two tin the flass were in active operation about three days, and great was the rejoicing. Then the evening, just after the lamps were lighted, when everybody was out on porch and from lawn, along came a neat-looking runabout, which drove quietly up to the cutting, and quick as a flash, up stepped a man, reached for the tin shades, and off they was with him before one could say Jack Balance.

ATE SUMMER DAYS

before the gaslamp, and weighted it like a tail to a kite, with one string hanging toward the ground. This worked splendidly. The family resumed porch rockers and the eldest son got out his mandolin.

A half hour later there chanced to stroll that way a sighing swain, accompanied by his lady fair. Now it is a pleasant neighborhood for a stroll, indeed, with overhanging trees and uice clean grapited payaing trees and nice, clean granitold pave They came leisurely along, wrapped in conversation, and the swain had gotten as i conversation, and the swain had gotten as far as—"I tell you, Mayme, there is something about you altogether different from other girls. Now—"

Just here he spied the dangling string. Reaching up his hand, he gave it a jerk, as it to emphasize the fact that Mayme was so different, don't you know, and down came the whole structure!

You should have heard the noise. Pater different, don't you know, and down came the whole structure!

You should have heard the noise. Pater familias shouted:

"Can't you let that thing alone?"

The small boys piped:

"Keep your hands off'n that, now."

Mater added her mite of strenuous objection, and the youth stood absolutely dumbfounded.

Then he started on with the lady fair. But the next porch people had seen the catastrophe. They were not to be outdone by their neighbors. They too, took up the hue and cry, and added their sarcastic flings.

And so it went all down the line. From porch to porch remarks were hurled at the poor unfortunate, who finally scudded off as fast as ever he could, the girl keeping pace beside him.

And then those graceless porch people had the inhumanity to tell the story and say that they actually pitted his embarrassment.
